Hi [Redacted]

I passed this onto [Redacted] and we agree that this should go to the police wildlife crime unit as it was not something carried out under a marine licence. It should also be entered as a case in MSIR for recording purposes, assuming you have access to that system?

Kind regards

Hi both,

Forwarding this email I received today. This wasn't under a seal licence but I am aware that there is a provision in the Marine Scotland Act to kill a seal to alleviate suffering. There is a form to be completed: <https://www2.gov.scot/Resource/0050/00507610.pdf>
[Redacted] - do you know if one was submitted for this?
[Redacted] - I'm not sure if this is something for compliance as this wasn't under licence and the SSPCA were involved, but thought you should be made aware.

Best wishes

Subject: Seal shot at Poolewe 22nd January

All,

We recently received for necropsy a juvenile male harbour seal (ref M60/20), submitted to us by Mowi Scotland, shot apparently on welfare grounds and under instruction from the SSPCA, due to a 'substantial wound to the rear flipper'.

Upon examining the animal there was no clear pathological reason for this animal to have been euthanized. The wound was a superficial skin defect, <20mm across in the webbing of the hind flipper, with no associated inflammatory reaction or indication of infection. The animal was in thin body condition, with evidence of congestion and focal consolidation to the lungs, possibly suggestive of pneumonia. Parasite burden was however low and otherwise the animal appeared healthy and had been recently feeding.

If possible, could you clarify why this animal was euthanized, who made the decision and on what basis? For example was the animal particularly lethargic, exhibiting neurological signs or otherwise unsuitable for rehabilitation?

Whilst it is appreciated this was likely all done in good faith and with the animal's welfare in mind, given the protected nature of this species it is concerning from both an individual and population basis if animals are being removed unnecessarily.

Many thanks

I have also attached the response from the sspca.
