

COURAGE Katie Film deal for acid hell Katie

Acid attack victim Katie Piper's story could be made into a movie.

Former model turned TV personality Katie, 33, has revealed producers have bought the film rights to her life story.

An industry source said: "It's a hugely emotive story that would make a brilliant film."

Katie had sulphuric acid thrown in her face in a London street in 2008.

Attacker Stefan Sylvestre was put up to it by Katie's vicious ex-boyfriend Daniel Lynch, who had raped and beaten her.

Katie is now a married mother of one with many TV credits.

Her next documentary, My Beauty Secret, will soon air on Channel 4.

Baby photo pioneer dies

Swede Lennart Nilsson, who pioneered in-womb photography, has died aged 94.

Nilsson's stunning photos of a developing baby first appeared in Life magazine and then the 1965 book A Child is Born.

He developed techniques of extreme close-ups which he used with endoscopes to take the photographs.

FISH FARM PERIL FOR GIANTS OF THE SEA

OUR GREAT SKATES ARE ON THIN ICE

SITE Dounie on the Sound of Jura
■ Heather Greenaway

Film-maker John Aitchison has spent his life filming incredible creatures as they fight for survival.

Now John, who has won acclaim for his spectacular work on the BBC's Planet Earth series, is caught up in a natural drama much closer to home – the battle to save a species of fish.

The Scots double Emmy winner fears for the future of the critically endangered common skate if proposals for a salmon and trout fish farm at Dounie on the Sound of Jura are approved.

The skate, weighing up to 15 stone, live in the deep troughs of the Sound, a Marine Protected Area (MPA).

John, 50, who lives in the area, is leading the charge to protect the skate and the wild salmon and sea trout which could also be put at risk.

He said: "The fish farm location is just 200m from one of the deepest troughs, and therefore from the skate. No one knows what effect effluent or the fish farm pesticides will have on them."

He added: "I believe fish farming has its place and is a good provider of rural jobs but the siting is vital."

"This is very much a test case of whether the Scottish Government will back up their conservation rhetoric by showing what MPAs really mean."

A spokesman for the Scottish Environmental Protection Agency, who will decide on the application, said they had received a number of representations on the matter.

Applicants Kames Fish Farming Ltd were unavailable for comment.
